

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A virtual reality cardiac training device comprising a primary audiovisual playback device, a secondary audio playback device, and a virtual reality display device capable of reproducing both video and audio. The device is used in combination with 5 prerecorded audiovisual recordings of sporting events made from a first-person perspective such that when played back on the device, the impression of the user's participation in the sporting event is created.